

ARTWORK BY STEVE OLIVER

The Rafinesque's big-eared bat is a rare species that's found in southern U.S. states. It eats insects and likes to roost in hollow trees in the forests. But that habitat is disappearing and they sometimes move into old buildings and attics. This is a grayish-brown bat with a white stomach and very big ears.